LUMBER CARR

The leaking and poweress lumber carrier Ross Sea, which ran aground in heavy fog Friday near Port Alberni, is expected to arrive under tow at Esquimalt Harbor this morning.

The 25,000-ton ship was holed and taking water after she slammed onto a reef off Cape Beale at the entrance to Barkley Sound on the west coast of ancouver Island.

No injuries were reported and aboard late Saturday.

FOG REPORT

The incident occurred about 4 a.m. when the vessel was attempting to reach Port Al-berni on a trip from Harmac, near Nanaimo.

Two holds were fleeded, tanks ruptured and costs of Sea anchored off Bamfield to await two tugs from Vancouver Tug Boat Co. Ltd., of North Vancouver.

Hard-Line Stand Urged On U.S. Subsidiaries

MONTREAL (CP)-The Financial Times of Canada says the federal cabinet's special committee on foreign-controlled companies in Canada urges the government to take a hard line on their activities.

The weekly paper says the committees report, prepared by eight university economists, is to be turned over to the cabinet in two weeks.

It says the report claims Canadian sovereignty has been "unacceptably eroded" by claims on these subsidiaries and makes six recommendations to make such companies more sensitive to Canadian inter-

Tenders Suspect

WHEN, BY AN excement supposedly of mutual advantage, Britain was allowed by the United States to bid on a navy order for 16 min it was confidently predicted that the contract would go to a United Kingdom yard. The generally lower costs of shipbuilding in Britain, due in part to a wage-cost advantage, were considered nothing less than a guarantee. The devaluation of the pound sterling gave the British another excellent reason to suppose their bids would be out of reach of any American challenge. There was astonishment and anguish, therefore, when the bids for the first nine of 16 vessels were opened in Washington. Vosper Thorneycroft's tender of $55,000,000 was undercut by two American firms, Pacific Wood Treating Corp., of Ridgeville, Wash., at $49,300,000 and Marmolich Shipping Corp., of Tacoma, at $49,600,000.

The United States defence department still has time to satisfy itself that the bids are feasible, and in theory the contract need not go to the lowest bidder. But Congress has shown itself hostile to orders going to foreign yards, and it would be politically difficult for the administration to refuse the lower bids even if their feasibility were in question. The doubt certainly exists

The British make no bones about their suspicion that the American companies are tendering at a loss. They may be hoping, it is suggested, that ultimately they will win the contract for the remaining seven vessels and thus be able to spread costs over all 16.

Whatever the outcome, Britain will be hesitant, surely, to enter into any future agreement which appears to provide an opportunity to win American defence contracts in return for British purchases of

After Britain had contracted to purchase 50 F-111 fighter-bombers and had received assurances she would be able to bid on $325,000,000 worth of defence contracts on equal terms, her faith was shaken by the Senate vote last September to amend the 1968 appropriations bill to ensure that all naval requirements would be fulfilled by American firms.

At that time the British defence secretary said: "If I saw any sign that this was the beginning of the end of the F-111 agreement it would raise the most serious problems of defence and foreign policy and undermine the whole relationship between Britain

This latest development, in the minesweeper deal, will no doubt be pondered with similar concern in Whitehall and, perhaps, in other capitals contemplating reciprocal trade arrangements with Washington. Any suggestion of sharp practice in such affairs could be most harmful to the suspect party.

Familiar Words

TT WAS written browsing through the files looking for information on another subject that Premier Bennett's New Year's Eve message popped out at us. With the approach of the new year, he said, he was more optimistic over British Columbia than ever before. But it was important that the government have the co-operation of labor and management and farmers and businessmen.

Canadians must take a new look at national policies if Canada was to avoid a recession and unemployment. Being located next door to the United States, Canada must have a dynamic policy to compete and survive with a prosperous economy. And the nation should have a low interest rate policy.

Sound familiar? The more things change, as the French say, the more they are the same. This was the premier's message welcoming 1959. The information we were seeking concerned Fidel Castro's seizure of Havana and overthrow of the Cuban dic-

Alternative Shadows

EGYPT'S INDICATION that it may soon release 15 ships trapped in the southern portion of the Suez Canal, by removing a sunken vessel that bars their way, may appear to offer no hope that the whole canal quickly be cleared and put back in operation. The Egyptian government sticks to its demand that Israel withdraw from the east bank, which the lat-ter occupied in the June war, before this action is undertaken. A government spokesman cites the very practical reason that to clear the whole canal, operations would have to be conducted from both banks and Egypt cannot operate from the Israeli-held side, or "under the shadow of Israeli guns."

Nevertheless this could be an opening. Only three months ago the Egyptian position was that no part of the canal could be cleared before an Israeli abandonment of the east bank; enabling the trapped British, U.S., French, West German, Swedish, Bulgarian, Polish and Czechoslovak ships to move out by unplugging the southern end has now been found

Furthermore Egypt is under severe pressure to get the canal working again. Israel has been under political pressure to withdraw. But Egypt's motivating force is economic, and with delay the implica-

Various estimates have been given of the foreignexchange earning tolls the Egyptian government has been losing through the closure of the canal for nearly seven months. But an average figure seems to be around a million dollars every two days. Next to cotton exports, the canal has been the country's biggest source of revenue, far ahead of third-place

There is thus an immediacy to the plight occasioned by the canal being out of service. But the longer it remains closed, the poorer are the prospects of it regaining its pre-war economic lustre for Egypt.

Before the six-day conflict, the Egyptian plan was to make the Super wides and deeper to enable was to make the Succe wider and deeper to enable loaded tankers of 110,000 tons to use it by 1972, and 200,000-ton vessels to do so by 1975. But the war and the closure besides setting back any such program both through the deterioration of the canal and the drain on Egyptian resources—has undoubtedly accelerated the movement to still larger ocean giants which because of their tremendous payloads and disproportionately small crews can operate more eco-nomically "the long way 'round" than two or three lesser vessels carrying the same weight and using the shortcut. One oil company this fall ordered six 240,000-ton ships.

If Egypt cannot open the canal under the shadow of Israeli guns, it will keep it closed under the shadow of the guns of economic disaster.

Gustemala, Honduras, El Salvador, Moaragua and Costa Ráca, alone among the less-favored nations of Latin America and the world, have nameged to moid themselves into a regional common market people hope for a brighter future.

The area that forms the land bridge between North and South America, stretching from Mex-Panama in the south and east, long was better known throughout the world for the violent little revolutions that punctusted its history.

Although there are still occusional outbursts of insurrectional activity, Central America has been consciously making an effort to improve its political image in the years since the ast world war.

One of the persisting myths is reflected in the "banana sepublic" Inbel.

Of the five countries, only Honduras still depends primarily on butterns as a main source of dollar income. All the other countries have found coffee growing more profitable. It is true, though, that the five Central American republics do have too few products to sell in the United States and other markets where they might earn the hard cash it takes to pay for needed imports.

Demand abroad for barmas and coffee is relatively inclustic. That is to may that no matter how wealthy a potential foreign customer may be, he will drink just so many cups of soffee or eat just so many benenes a day.

Why, when a transportation company gets into trouble, does it immediately take steps to slash service - particularly at a time when that ever before?

Everybody recognizes that the use of automobiles in city cores is on the way out and areas are on the way in. And yet a fast, efficient bus service which could get people to and from these comm areas in large numbers is not ently by a utility which is supposed to be the servant people it is supposed to serve.

Teachers on School Boards Issue Re-fused

Should They Be Muzzled?

Should a teacher be allowed to sit on a school board? New fire has been stirred into the old issue since the B.C. School Trustees' Association asked the provincial government this fall to ban teacher-trustees

For years a teacher has been allowed to run for election to a school board in a district other than the one where he teaches. There are several teaches trustees in B.C., including one on the Vancouver School Board.

Last October, the annual convention of the BCSTA ahowed by a 162-129 ballot that the majority were against teachers on their boards. That debate was reviewed in this space earlier this fall.

the issue in a clearer light.

In December BCSTA president Frank Beinder presented his organization's views and proposais to the provincial cabinet in an annual brief.

The brief stated more clearly why the BCSTA fears teacher-trustees, though it didn't say everything.

One reason for the BCSTA's stance, said the brief, is "the

"The rich get richer and the poor don't get poorer necessarily, but they get poorer in relation to the wealthier provluces." Premier Joseph Smallwood of Newfoundland told the Confederation of Tomorrow conference in Toronto. The gap remains a major concern as the four eastern partners in Confederation look ahead to Canada's second century.

For Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, the centennial celebrations of 1967 were an esthetic success as a tribute to a historic achievement, but statistics of a year fraught with stultified progress are bound to dull some

Real Thorns

In addition to marking time with or even slipping behind national growth rate, the Atlantic provinces had to contend with some downright thorny problems.

The Nova Scotia government had to do some quick stepping to ward off closure of the Sydney steel plant; Atlantic manufactureres claimed severe pocket-book pains in the wake of increased less-than-carload rail rates; the tourist industry looked at shrunken revenues and pointed an accusing finger at Expo 67, and a wet summer lett many farmers with soggy

Tough Test

The impending shutdown was a tough test for Premier G. I. Smith, who only a month before had inherited an apparently healthy province gressive Conservative leader. Robert Stanfield. Premier Smith's immediate course of action was "to buy time" an agreement for government takeover of the 66-year-old steel plant.

The agreement will keep the mill alive and in full production until April 30, 1969, but finding a long-term solution may be difficult in view of Sydney's distance from Canadian markets and the growing threat of cheap European steel under reduced tariffs of the Kennedy Round agree-

WINNING AUDIENCE

The introduction of recitals by visiting artists is an enterpola-ing venture that is slowly winning an audience. Generally speaking there is a tendency here to follow the Vancouver pattern and pay homage rather than talent.

This situation is being cor rected and credit for this go to the University of Victoria.

to ring in the New Year. Ridiculous? Maybe, but we bet there will be people on the clam-digging grounds just be-fore midnight, and plenty of steelheaders on the rivers and salmon fishing grounds New

And if you still have doubts about New Year's clam dig-ging, Muriel Wilson's Thought Food in today's Islander says clam nectar is about as fine a hangover cure as you will find.

Clam digging tides tonight are 9 p.m. at Sooke, with a .6-foot tide; 9:25 p.m. in Victoria waters with a low, low .1-foot tide; and 10:25 p.m. for a zero tide in the waters covered by the Fulford tide table, which includes Saanich Inlet.

So don't be chicken, Gather up those shovels, forks or clam guns, put on your boots and get your gas lamp or fiashlight ready and head for the beach. The hot rum toddies can come later, with steemed clams in drawn butter.

If you cen't make it tonight, there are good tides for clam digner and oyster gathering on New Year's Day 960 p.m. at Soke 10:10 p.m. at Victoria, and 11:45 at Fullard.

There will be highest tides of the year this weekend as some of the lowest, so waterfront dwellers have to waterfront dwellers have to hope there won't be any storm or ocean swells like those that damaged waterfront dwellings around Dec. 2 when the tide was scheduled for 11.3 feet, but actually went a foot higher because it was backed up by gales which whipped the sea to a frenzy.

But that tide and the high tide last night was only 11.3 feet. Highest tide of 1968 will be Dec. 20 when it will reach 11.7 feet at Sooke and again threaten our cabins along Gordon Beach and the Cordova Bay homes along Parker

One of the most important bits of equipment in any Vancouver Island outdoors enthusiast's kit should be a current tide table.

This little booklet provides the basis of all kinds of fum. Best fishing times are usually the change of tide periods; low tides are the times for beach fun, thim desire, ovster gathering, intertidal oyster gathering, inter-tidal explorations, rock - hounding seaweed collecting.

* * * Ti is a good idea to plan your holidays with If you are going to a beach like Qualicum or Parksville or Rathtrevor, low tides will bring more beach fun. But if you are a fisherman the extreme tides are not usually the best fishing tides, and they come with extreme low tides. Lowest tides of 1968 will be June 11 when the tide drops to -1.0 feet in Victoria waters at 9:40 a.m. DST and -.1 feet at 9:50 DST at Sooke. Tides are similar all around the Island, except they get a little later as you round the lower Island and head up

Georgia Strait. There will be other minus tides in the Victoria area and extreme lows everywhere else on July 8, 9, 10 and 11, and that is a good time to plan a holiday for beach fun. But remember, if swimming is your main activity at the mean you have a long wait for the tide to come in over the hot sand and provide warm swimming water. In winter low tides come at night. In summer they come during the day, usually in the mornings. Here are some of the low

Cold Snap For Birds

Victoria's annual bird count will probably fall behind last year's record tally, Murray Matheson said

Number of species spotted was 126, down two from last year, he added, but hopes are saim of treating the 1366 count of 65,000 birds. It will be several days before tallies are completed.

LSD-Type Drugs Grave Sin Used Regularly, in Quantity

daily newspaper sought Friday to remove all doubt about the Roman Catholic Church's injunction against use of narcotics and psychedelic drugs such as LSD.

It said use of such drugs regularly and in quantities is a grave sin. But the paper, L'Osservatore Romano, also implied that taking a small quantity of drugs in a way that did not constitute a habit is only a minor sin.

L'Osservatore's editorial, by theologian Gino Concetti, is clearly aimed at an ultraconservative Roman Catholic element in Rome that accused the paper earlier this month of implicitly approving drug-taking to experience religious feelings.

The paper said the conservatives, whose views were published in the Rome daily Il

LADYSMITH - Under the leadership of this town's first woman mayor, this former miners' settlement is slowly developing into an attractive gem along the Island's east coast.

Three years ago it became a town, and its population now is 4.500.

Blessed with natural beauty end hugging a hillside which climbs from the Trans-Canada Highway, Ladysmith now is tired of playing the role of the ugly duckling.

Changes Made

Since Kay Grouhel took the reins of the council three years ago, things began to change. Nineteen hundred and sixtyeight will witness another phase of progress closest to Mayor Grouhel's heart, in the deveiopment of a land assembly mark before," commented a new sawmill which employs 60 men and plans to expand its operation." We also created a fund toward a new fire hall, which is badly needed."

Climbing Roses — (A.E.S., Colwood)

There is nothing detrimental to your climbing roses in the actual stucco of your house walls. The reason why your roses in the open did so much better than the specimens planted against the house is probably because they got

A site close up against a wall is notoriously dry, for it can get rain only from one direction, and even this is reduced if there is much overhang of Another common fault is planting too close to the wall. No only is the soil even drier here, but there is often an excess of lime in the soil exuded from the concrete foundation. Always plant well out from the wall — about 18 inches away — and train in the growth.

Ornamental Seed Pod — (E.J.Z., Duncan). The pretty seed pod you sent me, taken from a dried flower arrangement, is from a plant known as the Gladwyn Iris, actually Iris foetidis-sima. The specific name comes from

"fetid" and refers to the horrible smell given off by the crushed foliage, like unwashed feet. The flowers are small, a rather muddy purple-mauve, and not at all attractive.

In spite of these unprepossessing factors, the Gladwyn iris is very much in demand by floral art devotees for the unusual beauty of its seed pods.

These ripen in early autumn, with the fawny-brown pods splitting to reveal the brilliant orange berries like so many glistening peas in a pod. These make a most striking picture arranged with Mahonia leaves in a copper jug, or combined with tawny

The rootstock used is Ribes aureum, the Golden Current, usually grown from suckers rather cuttings as these make When the currant stem reaches the desired height, it is budded in June or grafted in February with any desired variety of gooseberry — usually one of the large-fruited English dessert varie-

Lawn Problem — (B.W., Mill Bay). It would be the height of folly to buy and lay sod on a lawn site heavily infested with couch grass. Your neigh-bor is mistaken in his belief that the sod would smother the couch; this pest

It would naturalize itself quite happily in the new sod, and thereafter it would be almost impossible to eradi-

To rid a site of weed grasses, the most reliable way is to allow the grasses to grow out and develop plenty of foliage, then while in active, vigorous growth, sprinkle or spray it with Dalapon Grass Killer, This chemical is absorbed through the leaf pores, then translocated to the roots, killing them most effectively. It should be safe to lay sod about six weeks after treatment.

Soil Fur Cactas — (W.E.M., Victoria). There is an increasing tendency today to grow houseplant each in ordinary all-purpose potting soil — the kind sold in plastic bags — rather than the weind mixtures recommended by old-time gardeners. The soil must be free-draining of course, and just to be free-draining, of course, and just to be on the safe side, I suggest you mix one part coarse-grained beach sand with three parts purchased potting soil. After potting, cover the soil surface with layer of pure sand.

"Would this stem the tide?" I asked.

"It depends on how many ripples you have in the waves of the economy. Some unemployment may wash over the but it's the undertow that we have to worry about."

"Could the body of our economy be hurt?" "I think it may become bruised and sprained, but I don't see any fractures or

The system can probably stand a certain amount of pressure, providing the input is not greater than the output. The problem here, of course, is heat. We can't let the cools off for a period of time, it might be difficult to start stoking up the fires again. I think here we have to think in terms of durable goods, if we think of anything at all."

Everyone can understand a smile, and Tommy was a hit even though they wanted to change the title and to change Tommy.

LUMBER GARR

The leaking and powerless lumber carrier Ross Sea, which ran aground in heavy fog Friday near Port Alberni, is expected to arrive under tow at Esquimalt Harbor this morning.

The 25,000-ton ship was holed and taking water after she slammed onto a reef off Cape Beale at the entrance to Barkley Sound on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

No injuries were reported and he 38-member crew was still aboard late Saturday.

FOG REPORT

The incident occurred about 4 a.m. when the vessel was attempting to reach Port Alberni on a trip from Harmac, near Nanaimo.

It was a warm September evening in 1889. Victoria newspapers, day after day, referred to the prolonged Indian summer with which this city was blessed. It was the perfect evening, therefore, for the gentlemen to sally forth, many of them in carriages, to attend a black-tie, very important dinner in honor of a British Columbia pioneer who had been elevated to the cabinet in Ottawa.

Victoria Men Whooped It Up In Swish Hotel Delmonico

Hon. Edgar Dewdney had been a member of the old British Columbia colonial legislature. He had been a member of the House of Commons, lieutenant-governor of the Northwest Territories, and now he was minister of the interior under Prime Minister Sir John A. Macdonald. Before he would end his career, by death in 1916, in Victoria, he would be the 1892-97 lieutenant-governor of British Columbia. Hon. Edgar Desodney was honor guest at that dinner so long ago in the restaurant of the swish Hotel Delmonico, if, today, you can imagine Victoria ever having had a hostelry by that fancy name.

All Victoria's top male citizens were there that night, and the food was marvellous, and the speeches often wonder how our pioneers stood the grind; and, there were never wives present, it not being consid-ered dignified by the gentlemen to have the ladles out too much in public. I often wonder, too, if the wives were happy at home, while their husbands were wining and dining at the Delmonico.

Those present, that night in September of 1889, make an impresaive who's who of the time: Premier John Robson, Hon. J. H.

Turner, F. S. Barnard, C. E. Pooley, Hon. Peter O'Reilly, J. A. Mara, Forbes George Vernon, D. W. Higgins, W. C. Ward, H. M. Brereton, Dr. Hamington, Thomas daile, R. E. Jackson, Rev. Canon

At the end of that table, over the way, the gentlemen, having finished with the park, got along to the fun of Mrs. Murphy's rooster. New Year in the Pass since that tide-swept, dogleg channel between Galiano and Mayne got the name Active Pass. Not, as you may think, because of the ceaseless commotion of its tides, but because the USS Active was the first steam vessel to navigate it. Previously it had been Plumper Pass, a name which, with curious obstinacy, the islanders continued to use until well after the turn of the century.

Today, to the locals, it's just "the pass," a place of strange moods and undefinable charm, where plunging blackfish sport in the boiling eddles, and in summer cormorants in uncountable thousands drift and feed with the tide.

I know all about this because for 40 years, off and on, I have see it in all seasons, which is as long as I have known my old Gallnano friend Leonard T. (for Thorneycroft) Bollhouse, who first coached me in the vagaries of the pass' tidal

Which in turn prompted the urge to acquire a boat of my own; and that's how I met George. He was on his cod boat, tied up at Mayne Island, when I passed the time of day with him one summer afternoon, and found something compelling about this gental little, gap toothed

Somehow he put me in mind of the Lincolnshire preacher, or maybe a character from Dickens. His carefree attitude was only equalled by his complete disregard for personal cleanliness. I remember, as we talked, that the underwear that showed through his open shirt was about the same color as his skin—mahagany!

I saw him periodically in the years that followed, and I guess it would be before the cod boats vanished from the pass that I heard from someone that George had finally got the burnt-out

In these days, any islander with a steady income of more than $40 a month was regarded as a person of substance. So naturally George's pension put him in the landed gentry bracket. As if to clinch the title, it was on a bluff above Georgeson's Bay at the west end of the pass, that

George built himself a little one-room cabin.

Always in evidence were his two brown hounds of indeterminate lineage, who always seemed to be gnawing on some shin bone of a deer. George used to knock off the occasional mowitch in the nearby island graveyard, where they liked to slesta among the tombstones.

As I say George's cabin was on a bluff where his single, curtainless window could give him the view across the pass to Prevost Island, and even as far south as Mt. Douglas on a clear day.

Shoved against the window was an unpainted table, and the rest of his furniture was a couple of obairs, an air tight sheet iron heater, and for a bed he used the old leather-covered, back seat of some vintage automobile. George's housekeeping was a bit sketchy, the table invariably showing traces of food scraps that dated back months.

He used an old army bayonet as bread knife, can opener, and kindling splitter. I have seen him break the ice on his water barrel with it, when he filled his radiator. For naturally George's car wou'd leak its contents overnight.

I can't remember him ever making any reference to his past, but certain it is he never gossipped or spoke ill of anyone. When it came to fish and animal lore, however, his knowledge was

For generations, nay for centuries, fur seals and the value of their pelts commercially have ever been of an alluring nature. Space permits but a mere outline sketch of the early history of the industry and its world-wide ramification, the interesting story of its inception in British Columbia and the early voyages of the schooners that formed the nucleus of a fleet that subsequently numbered almost 100 vessels. In the annals of that era, prior to Confederation, the names of the schooners, their owners and masters, are legendary. Told also, is how the schooners first used our native Indians as hunters. And of a sea tragedy that took the lives of a vast number of Indians who hunted the seals in their canoes from shore.

By GEORGE NICHOLSON author of Vancouver Island's West Coast 1762 - 1962

For Victoria, the sealing industry ended in 1911, when, under the terms of the International Pelagic Scaling Treaty made between Canada, the United States, Russia and Japan, to permit the herds on the breeding grounds (the United States' Pribiloff Islands in the Bering Sea and Russia's Robben Island and Commander Islands in the Sea of Okhotsk) to build up again after being almost depleted, all sealing in the Northern Pacific was prohibited.

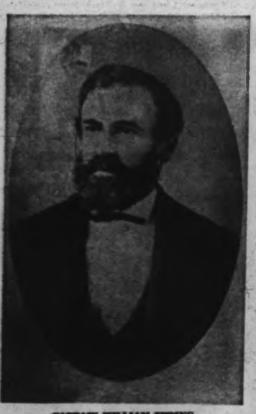

It was then that the surviving sole (many were lost at sen, or came to grief on faraway rocky shores), for years a familiar night in Victoria's Inner Harbor, dropped anchor never to go to see again, at least in pursuit of their former minimu. And Victoria lost one of its primary

The old battered trunk, hauled down from the attic, stood in the middle of the dining room floor; the large brass knobs on each corner shining is the sunlight. Wide leather arrays helped the large-leather-covered padioch heep the top down, and this was reinforced by strong rope fore and aft to insure its arriving semawhere all in one place.

Nowadays we are accustomed to he jets and an army of waiters and porters on trains to cater to our appetites. Not so in those days. You rustled up a picnic basket with two handles and a cover, and filled it with enough for your three meals a day to journey's end. Cold fried chicken was a staple. Extra supplies were three loaves of home-made bread, with a dozen ham sandwiches made up for good measure, a can of sweet pickles, a dozen or so cookies, several apple patties for dessert, a small bag of tea, sugarknife, fork, spoon and cup. Some brought their food in a duffle bag, and there developed considerable trading-"I'll trade you a piece of my corncake for a slice of your fruit cake!" etc.

At last the CPR train, with coal car, baggage and several well-packed passenger cars, ear and several well-packed passenger cars, puffed out of Toronto, the engine stack pouring black, billowing, evil-smelling cost smake into the air and under the window silk. After one night at the hotel new called the Piccadilly, on Pender Street, I found rooms on Melville Street.

This was Aug. 1, 1913, the worst part of the depression. Many Granville Street stores between Hastings and Davie were holding bankrupt sales with windows painted a glaring red. cases auctioneers were selling what stock was left. Needless to say, it was hardly the most auspicious time to arrive in Vancouver. In fact, most people offered the opinion that anyone deciding to stay in Vancouver must have a very large hole in his head.

In spite of the lack of a welcoming committee, three very good reasons presented themselves for staying:

Having lived in New York, left right at home in Vancouver with False Creek and Burrard Idea semissing me of the Mudson and East

At the end of the first month, I had a balance of $2.73.

In those days, very little money was in circulation under 25 cents. Merchants fid not want to be bothered with pennies, nickles or dimes. Ordinary lunches and meals ran from 25 cents to 50 cents with tea or soffee included.

50 cents with tea or softee included.

Drysdale's Ladies Wear on the west side of Granville, north of Georgia, was popular with the ladies, but went out of business later. Spencer's store (now Eaton's), The Hudson's Bay, Birks and many other shops were already in business. Some oldfinness will remember the Dagmar, a busy restaurant on Broadway near Granville, well patronized by business people in that district. Books of meal tickets for the week were sold for $4.50, and on Sundays some of the boys would walk over to the White Lunch on Costova, where they served a large plate of pot-roast with all the trimmings for 25 cents. FRASER RIVER STURGEON may be viewed in Victoria's Undersea Garden and Vancouver's public aquarium.

Death warrant for sturgeons is being served by overfishing and the thunder of polluted rivers surging through power dams

By DONALD OUTRAM

The time has come to reflect on the passing of that taste-tingling delight of old world nobility, caviar. What, no caviar! Gourmets would shudder at suck a thought, but the probability is a real one. The final hour approaches, sea sturgeons fabricators of the savory caviar-roe are fading into oblivion.

After successfully surviving millions of years of violent geological upheavals it is rather disturbing that in less than 100 years the effect of some man-made changes, namely, water pollution, hydro-electric power dams and overfishing has reduced world sturgeon abundance to markedly low levels.

Twenty-five varieties of sturgeon are distributed throughout the waters of the northern hemisphere. One of the largest from which the best quality caviar is obtained is the migratory beluga sturgeon. The beluga sturgeon dwells in the Caspian and Black Seas of southern Russia. The largest anadromous fish of North America is the white sturgeon.

This fish ascends the Sacramento, the Columbia and the Fraser rivers to spawn. Not too long ago the large white sturgeon and a smaller green species were occasionally taken in trawl nets off the east and west coasts of Vancouver Island. Sturgeons were also captured in the historic salmon-traps strategically located about quarter mile offshore from Scoke. Until the traps ceased operations in 1956 captive white sturgeons were sold in Victoria's fresh fish markets.

The Oxford dictionary states "the sturgeon is a royal fish" a reference to the historical fact that English kings considered the giant size and unique flavor of this fish something exclusive. King Henry I forbade the serving of sturgeon flesh at any table but his own. Longfellow also calls this species the king of fishes in his poem Hawatha. The name sturgeon stems from an ancient Germanic verb "storen," meaning to pokeabout an allusion to the method of feeding.

CAVIAR

... GIFT OF THE VANISHING STURGEON

But, eggs of fresh coho and chum salmon, herring and cod may be prepared as caviar

Let us unveil the private lives of these living caviar manufacturers. Although sturgeons are primarily marine creatures their embryos must develop in fresh water. Hence, once a year ripe females and males ascend the larger rivers to perpetuate their species. Each female will deposit more than 1,000,000 cells onto gravelly river bottoms.

Sturgeons are one of the few species alive today that resemble ancestral fossil forms. They relics from millions of years in the past. Sturgeons appear vaguely reptilian. They lack true scales, having instead several full-length rows of pointed bony plates as hard as ivory. Their survival to modern times is a direct consequence of the sturgeon's ability to live off murky, oxygen-deficient bottoms.

Sturgeons are usually on view in Vancouver's public aquarium and Victoria's Undersea Garden. These fish acquired from the Fraser River and Juan de Fuca Strait are about seven feet long and may weigh up to 200 pounds.

Sturgeons vary in color, from olive-green to slate-grey. The tail is shark-like and unevenly forked. They have minute, weak eyes and toothless jaws. In lieu of good vision, nature has equipped them with four barbels, or feelers, beneath the snout. With these sensitive feelers the slow-moving, mud-grubbers explore the bottom seeking out buried worms, molluses, insect larvae and small fish. Sturgeon flesh is highly esteemed some regions of the world either smoked or is the greatest among fish species. Tagging studies show that some sturge as now being captured were born in the 19th Century, more than 100 years ago. A 30 to 50-year life span is more common today.

are the largest of all fish. Some legendary weights recorded 'or these monster fish are 1,285 pounds (Columbia River), 1,800 pounds (Fraser River) and 2,000 pounds (Volga River). The world's record is a 14-foot, 2,250-pound giant captured in southern Russia in 1912. Of this enormous weight from 10 to 15 per cent would be potential caviar-roe, greater than the poundage of an average man.

The roe of a sturgeon centains, millions of eggs. When properly processed the spawn forms the sophisticated appetizer known as caviar.

About eight pounds of a special Lunenberg sait is added to 100 pounds of roe. Experts thoroughly mix and sample the salted roe at intervals to assess the taste, feel and appearance.

Caviar roe at this stage resembles black buckshot. Processing plants along the Caspian Sea ship caviar in 100-pound oaken kegs to markets in America, Germany and Scandinavia.

Russian caviar has become a scarce and expensive treat selling at $20 a pound.

The taste for caviar is acquired and seldom appeals to the uninitiated. Caviar has a reputation as an extravagant delicacy beyond popular appreciation, something choice and exclusive. Should the reader wish to sample Russian-style caviar a visit to some of the larger foodmarkets will undoubtedly yield this treat packed in one or two-ounce class iars.

Some caviar devotees prefer to eat this premeal appetizer by simply spreading it thinly over unbuttered toast. North Americans favor caviar as an hors d'oeuvre served with finely-chopped nions, hard-boiled eggs, lemon wedges and champagne

A caviar dip can be prepared by blending together 1/2 pound cream cheese, 1 oup of sour cream and 2 tablespoons of grated onlon. Mix in % cup of black caviar and serve with crisp crackers or fingers of toast. A Russian-type breakfast can be made by spreading caviar over small bot pancakes and covering with sour

More than 80 per cent of the world's supply of caviar comes from the Caspian Sea fisheries of southwestern Asia. The city of Astrakhan located on the estuary of Russia's Volga River is the major processing centre for this capitalistic treat. Further south in Iran formerly known as Persia another large caviar processing locality is Pablavi.

Caviar comes in three grades. The best and largest type or grain is that from the giant beluga stargeon. A medium-sized grain called osetra comes from 300-pound sturgeons. The smallest sized caviar comes from the relatively little sevruga and sterlet sturgeons.

What are the hazards threatening the living moers of caviar?

The death warrant for sturgeons is being served by overfishing and the thunder of polluted rivers surging through power dams. Man-made modifications in the sturgeon's environment are eliminating nother fabled goese that lays golden eggs. The near extermination of wildlife by man is not uncommon. The North American bison, the Pacific Coast sea etter and the California sardine were all over-exploited almost to the point of Female sturgeons are no longer abundant in the Thames, the Elbe, the Seine or the Danube Rivers. In 1961 the world eatch of sturgeon amounted to only 19,000 tons. Of this 17,000 tons were taken in Russia, 500 tons in Canada and the United States and the remainder from the Black Sea off Romania. In comparison, the 1954 world catch of herring totalled over 4,300,000 tons. The decline in the sturgeon fisheries becomes evident when one considers that at the turn of the century the catch in one river alone, the Delaware, was more than 2,500 tons.

Less than 100 years ago sturgeons were abundant in the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence River and the Hudson River.

In British Columbia's salmon-rich Fraser River these giant fish occasionally still create havoc when they become entangled in gillnets.

The industrial development and pollution of European and American waterways has almost eliminated this unique fish everywhere but in the Caspian Sea. This 770-mile long inland sea of southern Russia is now the zoogeographical centre of sturgeon abundance. Here, sturgeons travel up the Volga and Ural Rivers to spawn. Even in this region a contury of unregulated fishing has taken its toll. Sturgeous are particularly susceptible to high fishing pressures because of their slow growth particular the study of their slow growth particular their because of their slow growth period. They require at least 15 years to reach maturity.

What can be done to check the dwindling sturgeon stocks?

Can alternate sources of unpolluted fresh water be found to harbor sturgeous?

In southwestern Asia there is a possibility that the cold, untainted streams of the Elburz Mountains in northern Iran can provide alternate breeding grounds for Caspian Sea sturgeon. Female Persian sturgeons are aiready contribut-ing markedly to caviar production.

Can cross-breeding create a hybrid that will spawn somer or one that does not require a freshwater phase? Russian sturgeons may be supplanted by hybrids from a genetical cross of the giant, slow-growing beluga and the small, quick-maturing steriet sturgeon. It is hoped that this hybrid will grow quicker and spawn sooner. However, it remains to be seen whether the taste, quality and quantity of the hybridized roe will be

Can fish-passage facilities installed in hydroelectric power dams effectively help sturgeons to reach their spawning grounds?

Can sturgeou eggs be artificially fertilized and reared in fish hatcheries?

There are more then 10 much hatcheries in the U.S.S.R. The results of an artificial culturing program will not be known for some time yet because sturgeons take a long time to reach sexual maturity.

If the Caspian Sea fisheries close down the world's high livers might have to accept other varieties of caviar. In the popular mind stargeon roe and caviar are synonymous.

However, eggs of salmon, herring, eod, hadodek, lumpfish and several other species have been prepared as caviar.

acceptable red Canadian caviar can be made from fresh coho or chum salmon eggs. First, split the egg mass and rub the roe gently through a half-inch sieve into a wooden tub. The sieve helps to separate the eggs from their connective tissues. Cure eggs in a saturated brine solution, testing 90 degrees on a salinometer, using a fine, mild-cure salt. Stir for 20 minutes with a wooden paddle to ensure thorough mixing or until the interior of the eggs coagulate into a jellylike mass. Dip eggs out and drain over a fine-mesh screen for 12 hours. Transfer to sealed glass jars and keep at 34 degrees F.

Red caviar can be used as the basis of a dip similar to that previously mentioned for black caviar or as an ingredient in salmon caviar cornucopias. Cornucopias are prepared by first trimming several slices of smoked salmon fiesh into triangles. Roll up into horns. Mix together % cup of sour erenm, 2 tablespoo

Stuff into the cornecopies. Chill, will the taste of tiny sturgeon eggs on the tongue become a fading memory? A Caspian Sea without sturgeon is comparable to a Campbell
River or a Cowichan Bay devoid of salmon. But stranger things have happened. One of the prices of progress in the 20th century through the combined effects of pollution, power dams and continued is a slow deterioration of the fish's environment; a deterioration which eventually results in a diminished resource. However, with an increasing awareness now being shown for the better management of our water resources perhaps the sturgeon may gain a reprieve. Let us hope that this giant of the sea will be able to co-exist harmoniously with the family of man for another million years.

NEW YEAR IN THE PASS

boundless. Though he has been dead these many years, he puts me in mind of a New Year's Eve (after a trip to Victoria) when I poted the nose of my truller into the pass. It had snowed during the day, and now around 9 o'clock there was neither moon nor shadow. A night, as George would have put it, "as black as the inside of a cow."

I was alightly underpowered (with a Thorneycroft "Handybilly") and it wasn't long after I passed the comforting blink of Helen Point light that I became aware that I was bucking the father and mother of all ebb tides.

Though the throttle was up an extra notch, and the motor doing its stuff, I was soon aware with the passing minutes that the light was standing still—which meant I was. Only thing to do was hold the how a point off the tidal stream and veer over to the Gallano shore. More than a point and I would be pushed back on the half tide rock behind me. Which in those days didn't have a marker on it.

It was tricky in the gloom, but more by good luck I found Georgeson's float, and by better luck managed to whip a line around a cleat.

Whether it was imagination, you could almost "hear" the tide, as the kelp leaves flapped and peculiar to Active Pass.

My wife and I were staying with the late Margaret Fisher then, who had a pretty little cottage perched on another bluff high above that right, past George's cabin, I could see by his light that he was still up. Going to bed, for George, (who hadn't had his clothes off in years), meant donning an old army overcoat, chucking a couple of pieces of bark in the istove, then calling his digs to join him as he stretched out on the old

At Mrs. Fisher's, that evening, we either read or played a few hands of gin rummy, until glancing at my watch I realized it was only a minute or so to midnight. Margaret produced some sherry, and holding our thin stemmed some sherry, and holding our glasses we unconsciously moved over to the window. Outside there wasn't a sound, the only light the intermittent pin-point from Helen Point. Even the Indian reserve over on Mayne was blacked out. So different from the bells, the whistles and clangor of New Year's Eve in the city. We were three silent people in a allent world. Then Margaret gave one of her shy smiles and, as we lifted our glasses, from below us, down the bluff, came the ear-splitting crash of a rifle.

The echoes went rumbling down the pass, bouncing between the high rocky bluffs, to finally end up in the far distance behind Mt. Parker on Mayne.

"It's just George" said Margaret quietly. "bringing in the New Year."

MURIEL WILSON'S Thought for Food ******

A brief step more and the world will reach the threshold of another year. Christmas and all its excitement is over and before too many hours we will be toasting the New Year. We will be wishing friends and neighbors a Happy New Year. Tomorrow we will be putting another turkey in the oven (I always wish New Year's didn't follow so closely on the heels of Christmas) or perhaps it will be a fine prime roast of beef. But after the New Year's dinner most housewives will give a sigh of relief that the parties are over and that it will be possible to get back to regular meals and plainer food.

Today I am not going to talk about fancy food. With New Year's only a breath away your party food will be already prepared and your selebrations planned. So we will skip a few days and talk about what's to be done with the remains of holiday feasting.

I am loath to use the word leftover. It seems to carry a stigma, at least as far as families are soncerned. However if food is presented in an entirely different form and thoughtfully seasoned there will be no need for apologies. One thing to remember and it is important . . . this second-time-around food must have eye appeal and it MUST taste good.

After New Year's most refrigerators will hold a turkey, goose or chicken carcass, some cooked ham or roast beef. What to do with them and how to present them to the family attractively is our concern today.

Our first recipe is for Turkey Encore which is really an elegant Turkey Pie. Turkey gets de luxe treatment, the second time 'round is a fresh cramberry stuffing crust. It looks so beautiful no one would dare to call it a leftever and the taste? . . . well just try H.

TURKEY ENCORE . . . 6 alices bacon; 1 package (8 oz.) stuffing mix, or your own; 1 cup fresh cranberries, rinsed, drained and chopped; grated rind 1 lemon; 6 thick alices cooked turkey or chopped turkey, if there are no full slices left; 1 can cream mushroom soup; 1-3 cup light cream and % cup coarsely crumbled potato chips.

To make the stuffing ple crust . . . dice becon and fry until crisp. Prepare stuffing mix according to directions on package, adding bacon fat instead of butter. Add cranberries, bacon and lemon rind. Mix well and press mixture into bottom and sides of a heavily greased 10-inch pie

Place turkey slices in centre of lined pan. Mix soup with cream and pour evenly over entire top of pie. If it is turkey bits instead of slices mix them with the soup and spoon into pie. Sprinkle top of pie with crumbled potato chips. Bake in a preheated 400 degree F. oven for about 25 to 30

This is what went into the filling . . . 1 tin cream mushroom soup undiluted. Use 2 tins for a large 10-onch pie as I made. Into this I mixed lightly sauteed mushrooms, sliced stuffed olives for color and a few blanched and toasted almonds. A dash of Tabasco and a pinch of onion salt were all the sessonings used. This was heated just to the boiling point and removed from the stove. The salmon was flaked into large pieces and 3 or 4 hardcooked eggs cut into large chunks. These were carefully forked into the creamy mixture, carefully so that the pieces were broken as little as possible. The filling was spooned into the hot baked shell. Grated cheese was sprinkled over the top and the baked pastry leaves arranged on top. Into the oven until all was bubbly. The sides of the pastry shell should be well built up (with an extra piece around the rim if necessary) to give a nice appearance. This pie was a great success. You can take the idea from here and make your own improvisation.

A green tossed salad, crusty French bread or homemade rolls are all that are necessary for the main course with a pie of this sort.

Eye appeal is important in all cooking. Cranberries should be still available, these gay little berries will add color and a tangy flavor to many a meal and many a dish. Just rinse and use straight from the package. We might call cranberries Natures' colorful gems, they need no praise from us when it comes to dressing up your menus. The Daily Colonist, Sunday, December 31, 1967-PAGE 9

There is never a dull moment at Laneron, the spacious Heron home set amid evergreens on Miller Avenue, for it houses a fascinating family of puppets, as well as their creators, George and Barbara Heron, and their six children, five of whom bring the puppets to life in wonderfully funny characteriestions from Mary Poppins, Santa and His Elves, The Beatles, and

Story

I spent an enchanted evening at Laneron recently, watching the Mini-Miners go through their paces during a rehearsal of a rehear of the rehea were planning to put on for Glamford School.

Laneron is a combination of Lane, Barbara

Heron's maiden name, and Heron. As for the origin of the name Mini-Manara, Barbara says: "I was stuffing a turkey at midnight when the inspiration for the name carne!"

Laneron rang with laughter as Ron, Mark, Shaun, Anne and Leslie brought their colorfully costumed puppets to life to the rollicking music of Mary Poppins, My Boomerang Won't Come Back, Sharnrocks, Shillelahs and Shenanigans, Santa and His Elves and Tiptoeing Through the Tulips.

The rehearsal put on by the Mini-Mimers of Heran Theatre was trilarious, and the performers enjoyed it as much as the spectators.

The smallest spectator, and with the brightest eyes, was Soott Heron, 2½ years old. He looks forward to the time when he will be old enough to take part in the puppet shows. Barbara Heron says, "Scott is our greatest fan, usually he is right up front leading the applause!"

equipped with lights and black curtains which were sewn by Barbara. There is a tape recorder to supply the sound for their shows, and a rheostat which George operates to control the stage lighting. He has also made a large wooden case to hold the dolls and their costumes.

He makes the copper wire frames for the puppets, and is helped in this project by Ron, the oldest son. Barbara then completes the puppets by stuffing them with rags and encasing them in an outer "skin" made out of cotton.

The bright costumes for their Mary Poppins number, which they put on for the Protestant Orphanage, represents a good deal of sewing, all of which was done by Barbara Heron. There are red and blue dresses, a plaid outfit, polka dot pants, also sequins and buttons sewn on for the "pearlies." Yet Barbara says modestly: "Oh, I'm not especially talented at sewing."

She uses bright colors and shiny materials that show up well on stage. She does beadwork and sequin embroidery, creates "eyebrows" and "beard" for Ron, who plays Santa in their Christmas Fantasy show. "I finished the last stitch the night before we put our first show on last Christmas."

Barbara chose silver and green as the predominating colors for the smart Irish costumes of Shamrocks, Shillelaghs and Shenanigans, a delightful number which the Misi-Mimers put on for a St. Patrick's Day Shamrock Supper.

She improvised with shells to make "teeth" necklaces, and plastic, to make red and yellow skirts for the gay costumes of My Boomerang Won't Come Back.

"While performing for an audience gives the children confidence, the main purpose of Heron Theatre is to build memories for the children while giving pleasure to others," Barbara says.

The Heron family are accomplishing both goals with their hobby—doing something together and building memories, and they have a scrapbook just bursting with mementoes of the pleasure their shows have brought to others. There are letters and cards of appreciation and thanks from a great many organizations, including schools, clubs and churches.

There is a handsome wall plaque with an inscription in gold, which was presented to Barbara Heron in special thanks for the work she and her family did in presenting the Mini-Mimers at the Camosun District Annual Scout Shows.

Audience reaction to the shows put on by Heron Theatre have always been good. "Of course, adults will 'get' the humor of a certain song, while it might be over the heads of the children in the audience, but the little ones always enjoy the colorful costumes, and also, they often think that the songs are actually being sung by the Mini-Mimers themselves," Barbara says proudly.

Unintentionally funny things sometimes happen when the Mini-Mimers are doing a show. Barbara tells of the time when "Anne's hat slipped down over her eyes during a number. This nearly brought the house down. I went behind stage to try to pull it back into place, but it slipped down again. After the show I asked her why she hadn't pushed the hat up with the foot of her puppet, and she replied: "Well, my underwear would have shown" (The pantuloons the puppet was wearing were especially made to be shown.)

George Heron is a Scout Leader, and sons Ron and Mark are Venturers, and Shaun is in Scouts. Anne and Leslie are Explorers, and they also sing in the Garden City United Church Choir.

For such a little woman, Barbara Heron keeps busy at an astonishing number of interests. Besides the pupper show bobby she shares with her husband and children, Barbara sings in the Garden City Choir, and plays the organ for the Junior Choir Sire also plays the accordion, is a member of the Banjaccs Accordion Band. She used to be a leader for the Canadian Girls in Training at Centernial United Church.

Busy as she is, she finds time for the little things that make a house a home.

When I first visited her several months ago, the fragrance of Christmas cakes baking filled the kitchen where she had her big work table piled with the bright little costumes she was checking over to make certain the Mini-Minners would look their best for the shows coming up.

More recently, when I visited Laneron, she showed me the Heron scrapbook over a cheery pot of tea and some most delicious lemon tea bread, all laid out on a prettily set table.

It looks as if the Heron family is keeping busy building up some fine memories, both for themselves and, through their pupper show hobby, for others as well.

OXFAM _ Oxford, and Friends, Against Famine

By VIVIENNE CHADWICK

A little while ago, if you had said "Oxfam" to many Victoria recidents, some of them might have replied vaguely: "Oh yes. Of course. English charity group - ign't it?"

But then the city staged that inspired, blazinglysuccessful Miles for Millions, and because, along with the Centennial Committee, it was sponsored by Oxfam, that name now means much more to many more.

It began in Oxford, cartainly. In 1942. Today its work, and its workers, reach around the world.

Victoria, says honorary secretary Norman Stephens, et 785 Menfoud Road, Langford, farmed the first Oxfarm committee in Chanda, late in 1963. He himself had been working with the local Qualter community, who were sending alothing abroad to disaster areas, and who presently turned their contributions over to Oxfam for distribution from its London warehouse. The movement has since spread across the co nent here, and Oxforn dominion he quarters are now located in Toronto.

Literature put out for the organisation makes fascinating and very moving reading. The emiss, mys one article, have meant "hod and clothing for the destitute; the recoding of their demaged lamb for disaster victims; needloine, sungical and moving and some for the fact; and medical care for the stell; advice and personal down-to-earth assistance from caseworkers for the old and the frightened; hope for drug addicts and refugees waiting to migrate; assistance with schooling and training for the young; encour-agement and practical help to poor farmers struggling to survive."

There are of course, several cheritable assistion whose work and hims one similar. The tragedy is that always and everywhere the continuing need seems to grow like a poleonous mushroom, ever thrust ening to apread beyond current fights toward alleviation. A world plaguad by war, famine, finds, hurrismness, earthquakes, and, great-est of all threats, ignorance, is a world in which help is sunaid on an ever-increasing scale.

Sometimes the various organiza-tions can help each other. Hot long ago Norman Stephens received a donation of a large number of out-dated textbooks, which he had accepted because he feels, like most people, that books should never be destroyed, although he hadn't the faintest ration as to what he should do with them. Then, in almost immediate answer to his problem, he read the recent story in The Bilinger about the Randwiy Library Committee and its need for books for under developed countries. So his boxes of books went on to Mr. and Mrs. Keir of Beach Drive for shipment abroad, and everybody

Vancouver Island Game Birds

By ROBERT TAYLOR

THE MALLARD is the most widely distributed and best known of all the wild ducks and can be found wintering throughout Vancouver Island. The "greenhead" as he is commonly called is an extremely wary foul and yet has adapted to the ways of man. He will take bread from a child's hand in our parks despite the fact that only a few miles away when subjected to hunting pressure he will become nocturnal, feeding by night and spending his days in the safety of open water.

in flight the mailard appears to be a large bird and under favorable light conditions at close range the dark green head and chestnut breast of the drake will be evident as well as the flash of white of the underwing feathers. The female, slightly smaller, appears as a mottled brown flash of the underside of the wing Both sexes have an iridescent blue wing patch, or speculum, on the inner roor portion of the upper wing surface which will help to identify the bird in the hand.

The mallard is a clean eater feeding primarily on fresh water

What Is a Canadian?

This is the sixth and final volume of the Canadian History Series, which was conceived by Thomas Costain, who wrote the first volume.

Up to and during the Second World War Canada was preoccupied with her emergence from the status of colony and it was not until the postwar years that this nation, much to most people's surprise, came of age as a dynamic and aggressively independent middle power.

Blair Fraser takes as his starting point Quebec's wartime resistance to conscription, which he shows to have been the planting of the seed of the separatist movement.

From there he threads his way through contemporary history expanding on major political milestones such as the beginning of the cold war which began "officially" with the sensational defection of Igor Gouzenko.

Blair Fraser was the ideal choice as author of this volume. From his perch in Ottawa this distinguished newspaperman has been an eyewitness to most of the great events of the postwar period.

of the postwar period.

Every chronicler of the here and now must project something of himself into the narrative and Fraser admits with charming candor that his observations are "vulnerable to bias, to partial information, and to premature conclusions"

Despite this, future historians will be grateful for the candid analysis of men and events by an inoisive writer who was there at the time.

Particularly well done are Fraser's revealing portraits of the men who influenced Canada's search for identity.

We are taken behind the scenes to watch the intense political manoevering that followed Mackenzle King's decline. We relive the meteoric rise of the charismatic John Diefenbaker, and we follow the decorous career of Lester Person, which gave new tone to international relations.

And, of course, we are regaled with the seemingly interminable reign of Louis St. Laurent, and stand in fascinated awe at the wizardry of the astonishing C. D. Howe whose accomplishments, says Fraser, were infinite "as long as his power was absolute."

Above all, this volume seeks to answer the question: What is a Canadian? Fraser does not attempt a pat explanation, but he does succeed in supplying a reason for Canadians to feel proud of the nation's achievements—which is a major step on the path towards finding that elusive identity.

That we still have a long way to go, however, is exemplified by the fact that this book of contemporary Canadian history was published and printed in the United States!

NEW BOOKS and AUTHORS

Three Light Novels

Reviewed by E. D. Ward-Harris

This has been a year of largely serious reading and I was beginning to think that the days of the light novel were passed. Then, out of the blue, three arrive—all by well-known authors. Eureka!

Nigel Batchin (The Small Book Room; Mine Own Executioner) is one of those rare novelists, a writer who never disappoints his fans.

who never disappoints his fans.
I dety you to read the first page of Kings of Infinite Space and not finish the book.

In this story, a British research scientist is, much to his astonishment, suddenly invelgled from his comfortable Cambridge college to train as an astronaut in Texas. The U.S. has already sent men to the moon, and brought them safely home, and now an international team of scientists is assembled to do research on the moon and in the space beyond.

Balchin's main themes are that astronauts are not supermen but human failings; also, what is the philosophy behind the vast space effort and where is it leading the human race?

leading the human race?

Balchin is on firm ground. No novelist moves so sure-footedly through the world of the experimental laboratory and the government research project. He never leaves the reader on the wrong side of a door marked "Private". or "Work in Progress."

The Stratton Story is nothing like as ambitious as the Balchin book, and doesn't pretend to be anything more than a good yarn in which a good cast of characters become the chess pieces in a thriller.

Readers familiar with the work of Elizabeth Cadell—this is her 26th novel—may be assured that The Stratton Story maintains the high standard of writing we've come to expect from this novelist.

Dodle Smith, better known as a playwright (Autums Crocus; Dear Octopus) uses a new twist to the homosexual theme in her new novel, It Ends with Revelations.

The story flows and, as one would

This is the introduction to an unusual political thriller, written by a former wire service avistion correspondent who knows how to present suspense at jet speed.

The bulk of the action takes place in Washington where the leaderless government drifts towards chaos as a weak vice-president, driven by an ambitious wife, backs himself into a corner that could precipitate a global nuclear war.

Also involved are a secretary of state who does not tell the vice-president everything he knows, a cabinet member anxious to retain his job under a new president, and the missing president's brother, who picks this inconvenient moment to disappear on a fishing trip.

The author keeps the tension going right up to the startling climax.

The feasibility of the whole thing gives one the creeps.—E.D.W.H.

Pictures and Text Make Rare Treat

You don't' have to be a Scot to appreciate this beautifully-produced, well-written and profusely illustrated book. Everyone interested in beauty and in history will find it fascinating.

Here are all the great castles and houses of Scotland, some dating back 1,600 years, as they are today, still lived in — mostly by descendants of the original owners — and lovingly cared for.

Text and pictures first appeared in that excellent magazine, Scottish Fleid, and whoever thought of putting the series into book form, (presumably George Scott-Moncrieff's is to be heartily congratuled. Readers who riffle through the

The late Sheila Forman loved these places as if they had been her own. Her immense research and lively sense of history lend the text a timeless charm.

SAVE THE SEALS

SEALS OF THE WORLD, by Gavis Maxwell; Longmans Canada; 151 pages; $0.85.

Victorians traditionally respond to a good cause, as witness the recent Miles for Millons which raised a great sum for the famished people in underdeveloped countries.

Here is yet another chance to do good, for part of the proceeds from the sair of Seals of the World are being given to The World Wildlife Fund, whose self-imposed task is to Gavin Maxwell's excellent book, which is libustrated, presents in detail the 31 remaining species of seal. Every important scientific fact known about these creatures is stated in language laymen can identify with. It is a fascinating book, highly recommended for both acults and children.

Man is the seal's ordy enemy, and what an enemy. The brutality employed by seal killers is called by Maxwell "a degradation to human nature." A lot of this bestiality takes place every year in Canada — which is an added inducement to buy this book. — E.D.W.H.

fourth day came on stormy. Still no sign of the missing canoes, and the wind freshening, the Surprise squared away for Clayoquot where Christiansen learned that the two canoes had missed the schooner in fog and returned to shore, both with good catches. Two more trips were made, but both resulted in but a few hundred skins; however, much was gained in experience for the benefit of next season's operations.

Attending the trading posts kept both the Surprise and Alert busy during the ensuing winter months, and early in the spring of 1867, Christiansen sailed the Surprise to Port San Juan (Port Renfrew). There he secured a crew of Pachena Indian hunters whose cances were smaller than those of the Clayoquots and therefore easier handled.

Encouraged by the success of the Surprise using Indian hunters, Captain Spring ordered the Alert made ready for scaling and the following season saw Peter Francis, now her master, set out with a crew of Ucluelet hunters to engage in his first venture as a scaler, whereas for Christiansen, it was his second season. Both schooners experienced good hunting, an average of 1,000 skins each for the season.

In 1870 three more schooners were added to the Victoria fleet. The schooner Thornton, J. D. Warren, owner and master, with Joseph Boseowitz as partner. And for the William Spring interests, the converted sloop Reserve, under the command of Niels Moos, and the schooner Wanderer, with Captain Sebastian of Nanaimo as master, both salling out of Didgers Cive, Barkley Sound, each with a full complement of Ohiat Indian hunters.

Indian hunters.

This it can be said: Captain Warren, whose career as a pioneer sealer, is contemporaneous with that of William Spring and his associates. Warren, a Prince Edward Islander, born in 1837, with the Thornton, previous to her joining the sealing fleet, had, in partnership with Boscowitz, for several years engaged in trading to the Queen Charlotte Islands. Boscowitz, an American, operated a trading post at Neah Bay. He later moved to Victoria, became a Canadian citizen and subsequently owned a fleet of small steam freighters out of Victoria and Vancouver.

The season's catch averaged 1,000 skins a vessel, all of which operated satisfactorily on the methods worked out by William Spring on the suggestions made by James Christiansen; especially the grading of prices for the various sizes of skins brought aboard and measured, excluding the hind flippers, on a graduated rod. The flippers the hunters purposely left on to effect in size, only to have them cut off when the skins were placed in the salt bins.

Largely owing to the fact that the pick of the Indian hunters were now engaged on the achoniers, the trade in dried skins had fallen off considerably. This was bed news for the San Francisco buyers and loud were their imprescions against Christiansen, whom they called "That Crazy Dutchman."

At this

At this time the American pilot schooner Lottie, out of Port Townsend, was adding to the collections. While cruising off Cape Flattery waiting for an inbound ship, her crew of white men, using spears bought from the Neah Bay

FIRST SEALERS

Indians, were able to make small catches averaging up to 250 skins each season.

Three newcomers joined the 1871 fleet for the William Spring interests, the converted sloop Hamley and the schooner Carolina, only recently purchased and to suit her new career, lengthened and rebuilt at Sooke; and the schooner Anna Beck for Boscowitz and Warren. With a capacity to stow 20 canoes and accommodation for the hunters, the Anna Beck was now the largest sealer in the fleet. Under Sam Williams, who brought her up from San Francisco, she made her first trip out with a crew of Ahousat Indians. All told, the Victoria fleet now comprised eight vessels, with the season's eatch about the

Still the monopoly enjoyed by the Alaska Commercial Company was a source of concern among the schooner owners. However, it soon became evident that not only could the market absorb these large collections, but demanded more

This was brought about when it became known that the bugers were showing a marked preference for Northwesters, the name coined for pelts taken off Cape Flattery and along the west coast of Vaneouver Island by both the schooners and the Indians who hunted the animals from shore, as against the Alaskas the name given those from the Priblioff Islands. The seals taken by the schooners and shore hunters would then be on their way to the breeding grounds, their fur prime, clear, deep and perfect. In contrast, those of the Alaskas, taken while the animals were breeding, dull and chafed. Hence, superior prices for the Northwesters.

In 1873 the splendid schooner Favorite joined the fleet. Of French design, this 51-ton vesuel was built at Sooke by William Barr in 1868 for William Spring and Hugh McKay, specially as a cod fisher in the Sea of Okhtosk, with her cargo to be delivered to ports in the Hawalian Islands. This idea, however, was later abandoned in favor of what her owners considered might be a more lucrative trade: usal and lumber to Maxico, with return eargoes of California redwood for Victoria, and in between, salted salmon and lumber to Honolulu with return cargoes of sugar, molasses and fruit.

Meanwhile there was a demand for tormage in the B.C. constwise service to the Queen Charlotte Islands and taking advantage of these conditions her owners obtained a profitable charter. The Favorite operated in this trade for a little more than a year, when she was replaced by a larger vessel and returned to her owners. It was then that she joined the sealing fleet of William Spring and his masociates, making her first trip out, and a most successful one, with a missed erew of Indian hunters from Kyuquot on Vancouver Island's west coast and Cumchewa in the Queen Charlotte Islands.

The experiences of the Favorite, first as a freighter and later a sealer, including several brushes with Russian gunboats in the Bering Sea, could well fill a book. She ended her days in the winter of 1920. After years of idleness, moored in Victoria's Inner Harbor along with many of her eleter sealers, she was purchased by Captain George Heater, one of her former scaling masters, for use as floating hostelry for his female emproyees at a herring saltery he operated at Sidney Inlet on the west soast of Vancouver Island. Left unattended while the plant shut down for Christmas, she sprung a leak and sank at her moorings. And there she lies to this day, six fathoms deep on the bottom of the sea.

With an average of 1,200 skins taken by each of the eight schooners, and the trading posts, where the shore husters sold their catches, between them contributing another 4,000 and prices still climbing, the 1873 season's take was considered highly successful.

The first trading posts on Vancouver Island's west coast were located at Spring Cove on Ucluelet Inlet and on Spring Island at the entrance to Kyuquot Sound, respectively. Because of the fact that both were established by William Spring, hence the name he subsequently bestowed on both cove and Island by the Hydrographic Board of Canada and retained to this day.

Board of Canada and retained to this day.

R was during the season of 1874 that James Christiansen resigned to go piloting. The loss of his abilities, as well as his genial personality, was greatly felt by Spring and Francis. Promoted captain, James Peterson now became master of the Surprise, but misfortane was to overtake his command that very winter. Whilst beating out of Sooke Harbor against a southeaster, The wind caught the deckload of empty oil hogsheads the Surprise was bringing to Victoria. She missed stays in the choppy seas near Secretary Island, drove ashore and became a total wreck. Thus the mother ship of Victoria's then small fleet of sealing achooners ended her career.

Surprise was bringing to Victoria. She missed stays in the choppy seas near Secretary Island, drove ashore and became a total wreck. Thus the mother ship of Victoria's then small fleet of sealing schooners ended her career.

In May, 1875, disaster overtook a great number of Indians, who from the villages along the west cost of Vancouver Island, hunted the seals from shore. In some instances it took the lives of almost the entire adult population. Caught in a gale of wind from the NSE, up to 70 canons were overtaken and driven far out to sea. A few, mostly Hesquita, managed to reach shore, but many were the sad stories told by the survivors of those whom they met in the storm and no doubt perished later. The disaster resulted in a serious curtailment in this form of sealing, with its comequent loss to the stores.

With the schooner Juanita replacing the old Carolina, sold to the B.C. pilots for use out of Victoria, the number of vessels comprising the Victoria fleet remained the same, nine all told. As the number increased, both white and Indian hunters were used, with the owners extending their operations to the Bering Sea and off the Japanese coast. More on this, with the rismes of the schooners, their owners, masters and some of the white hunters, in a future article.

QUATSING SOUND, looking up the southeast arm to Port Alice.

IDA ILSTAD . . . forced to be brave.

By IDA ILSTAD

The journey home for the fessi tive season is, today, a simple matter for most people. Transportation is rapid, comfortable, safe and there is a varied choice. But in the year 1919 travel was far different. To locations in areas off the beaten paths, travel was slow, difficult, uncomfortable and, in some instances, dangerous. It was In this year that the writer made a trip home for Christmas and New Year's that is still vivid in her memory.

A few days before Christmas, my brother, Gey Ildstad, was asked to take the Pronto, a 39foot gas boat with a speed of about 6½ knots, from Vancouver, to Quataino on the west coast of Vancouver Island. The Pronto was owned by the Whalen Pulp and Paper Mill in Port Alice. Mr. Whalen allowed my brother one helper for the trip and left the selection of his "one-man grew" to my brother's judgment.

Teaching near Vancouver at the time, I was virtually reconciled to spending a bleak and lonely holiday season away from home when my brother mentioned his trip on the Pronto and the selection of his one-man crew. Although the word "erew" required quite a stretch of the imagination to include a young proud female, my parsistence and family loyalty cinched the job for me as deckhand. Too, I would receive wages—the sum of $10 including meals! sum of $10 including meals!

On the clouding meals!

On the cloudy and threatening morning of December 22 we left Vancouver and headed north on our course along the inside passage—a stretch of water lying between the east coast of Vancouver Island and the mainland of British Columbia. The water here is usually calm enough for small craft in winter, but there are two hazards—the swift narrows and rapids near the Campbell River area, and the open stretch of Queen Charlotte Sound to the north.

On the first day of our journey we cruised along with a smooth running engine and a favorable sea until we reached Half Moon Bay. There we spent the night, and, on the second day, continued on our way as far as Squirrel Cove where we anchored until morning. Leaving Squirrel Cove next day our journey was uneventful until we reached the Yuculta Rapida.

TRIP HOME For NEW YEAR'S

The Yuculta Rapids are swift and powerful and their roar can be heard a long way before and their roar can be heard a long way before reaching them. Approaching these rapids, I experienced my first thrill of excitement. Running with the tide, we went through these awesome rapids safely. This was by no means due to chance, but due to Guy's skill and good judgment. After emerging from the Yucultas the tide was still with us and the Rapids soon faded from our sight. That night, on Christmas Eve, we anchored in Blinkensop Bay.

Next morning we arose at 2 o'clock and got under way. Everything went along according to schedule until we cleared the Alert Bay shelter and started across Black Fish Sound. Then we realised our danger. We were saught in a flerce southeaster and we were in the full sweep of Queen Charlotte Sound. Turning back in that rough sea was impossible. The waves were higher than the Pronto and they were breaking with great force. We were alone in that wild sea and had no means of communication with shore of other boats.

The cabin of the Pronto, including the door leading down to the engine, was glassed in. The possibility of the heavy breakers smashing the glass created a grave danger. Too, the hull of the Pronto was not designed for such rough seas.

At this critical time, engine trouble developed and there was no one but myself to take over the wheel while Guy worked on the motor. Although the engine trouble was corrected in a short time, that interval seemed an eternity to me, and holding the course in the huge breakers was no

My insistence on going along on the trip forced me to be brave, but I believed in using every source of help available. How willing I was to get out the life jackets! Guy informed me the jackets were not necessary. This, of course, was meant to bolster my courage. Today I realize the life jackets would have been of little or no use in the icy waters of that raging sea.

During the entire crossing of Black Fish Sound I stood close to Guy in the wheelhouse, straining my eyes for some sign of a luli in the storm—but no luli came. Nevertheless, we came through that terrible storm, and about 3 p.m. tied up to the dock in Port Hardy. The dock and dry land koked wonderful, and friendly citizens of Port Hardy came to greet us. They were amazed that we had managed to come through that storm when other much larger craft had run to shelter.

The Pronto was left in Port Hardy to await good weather for her trip around Vancouver Island's northern tip. Guy and I continued on foot on a muddy 10-mile trail that led to Coal Harbor on the west coast of Vancouver Island. From Coal Harbor we went by launch—about a two-hour ride—to our home in Quatsino.

At last we were home-the entire family waiting to welcome us. There was a wonderful dinner all ready, a Christmas tree trimmed and lighted with little wax candles. To me there was warmth and magic everywhere. Viewed from the safety of home, the journey seemed well worth the discomfort and danger—the Yucuitas, the searful grossing of Black Fish Sound, the strenuous hike across Port Hardy Trail faded into

That night as I sank into bed too exhausted to talk, I was overtaken by a most refreshing and blissful sleep—it was Christmas and I was home.
